

Project RADIX – Putting Down the Vocational Roots

Vocational Dictionary in Eleven Languages

Newsletter

In the last months, within the framework of the RADIX - Putting Down the Vocational Roots project, different meetings have been organised to promote the dissemination of the RADIX platform among people working with and for migrant people.

The aim of the RADIX project is to provide better access to the job market and educational system for migrants, refugees and NEETS and those who are disadvantaged in the labour market because they have either poor language skills or they are unable to match their current skills with jobs available in their country of arrival.

This was achieved through the creation of an online glossary which contains a series of key phrases translated into 11 languages (the main ones spoken by immigrant people in Europe) and covering specific occupational sectors (e.g. agriculture, care, industry, etc.).

During the meetings, educators, representatives of local enterprises, language teachers, social workers and representatives of migrant organisations had the opportunity to test and evaluate the functionalities of the platform

Professionals invited in these meetings shared that the opportunity to consult written and audio files is an excellent way of learning the language of the country of arrival. Furthermore, the focus on specific occupational sectors would allow them to focus on the sectoral language of the employment sector.

The online glossary can also be used via smartphone and the downloaded files can also be consulted offline.
